Experience: Frank began his dispute resolution career as a litigator at a major Canadian law firm, acting as counsel in a number of hearings over professional discipline, land use and development, commercial litigation, workplace and regulatory disputes. In 1994, he co-founded Stitt Feld Handy Houston, a new type of law firm focused on Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR); this firm and its corporate affiliates became a leading ADR organization, and Frank's ADR and ADR training practice dates from 1994. In 2004 he merged that firm with ADR Chambers to create Canada's largest leading ADR training and service provider. Frank is now located in Australia and is a principal of The Trillium Group, the Australian organization he established in 1999 and now operates with Steve Lancken and Paul Gibson.

Frank has participated in, given strategic advice concerning, and, acting as a neutral, has conducted many facilitations, mediations, and arbitrations in: corporate and commercial litigation; professional discipline complaints and litigation; workplace grievances in unionized and non-unionized workplaces (on issues such as working conditions, terminations, promotions, policies, and behavior); land use planning and development and environmental conflicts; agricultural, regulatory offenses and other administrative law conflicts. He has a strongly facilitative style through which he helps parties review the scope and implications of the options they have to resolve their disputes.
